

---

Store login for a year instead of just username

Posted by texmex - 2006/11/17 11:33

---

The forum has an option to store your username for one year. I was wondering what is the real benefit of this? I don't know any other sites that do this, instead they usually have an option to store your login for one year so you wouldn't need to login every hour like it is now.

I'm using Opera and it has capability to store the username and password to thing called "magic wand" so that I only need to hit ctrl+enter to fill the fields and send submit automaticly. It's a great help, but it would be even easier if I wouldn't need to do that. This is my private computer so I feel a bit stupid to login all the time when I want to post a reply...

Otherwise I like the site as it is, even though the reply and quote buttons are funnily placed on top of the next message (at least on my browser).

=====

Re: Store login for a year instead of just username

Posted by glaive - 2006/11/17 14:05

---

There is a bug in the login code that in some circumstances prevents your login from being cached. It's on my list of things to fix with the site.

=====