Beautiful, and very appropriate for the somber mood here today.

What I am feelin is the synthy-piano-vibrato like sound this piece reminds me of Max Richter and some of my favorite artists.

Sounds great! Listening to your first mix i was liking very much how subtle the background accompaniment was when it appeared. The alternative mix has left me not knowing which i prefer - they are both very nice! Hope you put one or other forward to Actuel's compilation. Strangely enough i broke out the piano for part of my track (although not as well played as yours ;) ).

I agree with matthew that there are elements of both that I like. The thing I like about the first mix is the fade in of the resonant sounds. Maybe its just that bit too sudden of an entrance in the second mix. When the sound is at full volume it sounds great to me but I think the fade in could be a lot longer.

subtile vs upfront, no better or worse, just different edit: btw steve, this tracks reminds me of PJ Harvey's track 'The River', one of the best albums from the nineties 'Is this desire'.

Thank you guys, for your feedback, listening and reference.

Indigo, I don't know Max Richter, but I'll wiki him. Philip, I did not know that river song although I must admit there is something similar.

Amanita, Liveseq, about the mix, here is the story. I first recorded that as a piano + EHX Cathedral track. I had the eBow and synth ideas afterwards, as well as some vocals. It was too late at night for the vocals recording, so I only added the former. However, I did not want to alter the initial intention: a piano piece.
Then my girlfriend suggested me the alternative mix, more upfront, which most of the listeners preferred :)

Finally, I've just followed the Liveseq's impression and added a fade in to the eBow and synth part. Thank you for that :)

This final version is to be submitted to Actual Memories...
