Hmmm. I love elektron and a new machine would always interest me however I just feel it is still way too early. Each machine so far has been made to complement the previous machines. Maybe a keyboard synth would be cool as a stand alone but we have to wait until we acculy find a single scrap of truth to this speculation. I just want more upgrades to the oktatrack right now. More fx, more bug fixes, more machines. Until I hear it from Elektron I find it a little pretentious.

Provided this is true.. (We don't really know right? :huh:

Well I think the interesting point on this the fact thai is supposed to be "the first of a new line" which should imply something like a possible series of FX processors, with a lower price tag and a wider audience!

Analog stuff would be the shit, but way too pricey..

If I had to guess, I'd imagine it'll be a sequenced effects unit with 6 inputs and 2 outputs. Configurable by either 3x Stereo or 6x Mono, with 2 knobs per track and an additional master section. Obvious mixing capabilities, several modulation sources and the ability to shuffle effects bins on the fly. Perhaps 16 trig buttons. First 8 control the 6 or 3 stereo tracks+ master, and the other 8 will control midi. Looping ability as well as brand new effects styles heavy on gating. Maybe the I/O will be on the bottom of the unit so it can butt up underneath the OT?

I have no idea. This is just what I'd like to see. It'll probably be better than this!

According to a mole, who managed to penetrate the Eleckron maximum security wing for 'clinically brilliant but evangelically optimistic elite' individuals, the new unit is the AME-101. AME, short for Automatic Mood Elevator, comes supplied with two probes & a wide selection of colourful sticking plasters, (some of which glow in the dark-NICE), these are of course affixed to the temple lobes & monitor brain wave activity! The up shot of all this, & here comes the clever part, is that as you manipulate the Trinity, the AME-101 swiftly dispenses a suitable tonic at the precise moment your body craves it! Most of the EU/USA/Canada etc. will have access to say a Martini at 4pm, Jack & Coke at 11pm or indeed a fully leaded Jager bomb in the wee hours but the Netherlands take the proverbial biscuit because, due to local bylaws, they'll be allowed to utilize the optional AME-Supergrade. This wonder of modern engineering has the added advantage of being able to administer a herbal option, everything from seasoned cookies to a full blown bong is on the cards! The unit is so advanced in fact that it's even capable of conjuring an extremely attractive nubile brunette who's only purpose in life is to provide at blowback, (I said 'blowBACK), at the opportune moment. Rumour has it that this latter option is only available to senior members of staff at present & that they are pursuing all avenues of experimentation with the utmost vigor!!! :laugh:

Perhaps something in eurorack format?
Would be cool, since a lot of modular people use Elektron gear already for impulses and sequencing..

I really hope it won't be an App. Apps are so meh. Elektron is all about performance and hardware.

I didn't think they would release something that quickly after the OT, which I love btw.

Like someone said before, it will be pricey, it will be buggy but it will be fn awesome.

I started with the MD, bought an MM without any expectations, fell completely in love.. that made me buy the OT and this one too blew my mind. Even with all it's shortcomings.

Excited :woohoo:

My guess is effects module as well, though I'm hoping for something bigger. Like the OT it would be an extension of the kinds of things the rest of the Elektron family can do (they can all really be used as effects processors) but more focused.

Even though I'm not super hot on the idea, I could see a KAOSS pad or joystick-controlled FX processor with a built in sequencer being pretty useful.

Either that or using that same logic, it could be a dedicated hardware sequencer.

im hoping for a large-lcd dedicated sequencer module with effects.
that wouldn't step on the other machines toes too much.. i'm doubtful about this though...

ipad app? i don't see this coming since that would be strictly software and kinda fights against "making music should be fun" IMO. Hardware and the hands-on experience is a must for Elektron machine? whos with me? If they do it really well it could be awesome as an sequencer or some sort of introductory thingam for Elektron's but that would be lame at best.

I don't see them going analog either. Analog just isn't their game. There are plenty of those around and their expertise lies with digital and glitchy, raw stuff.

Effects processor? They would have a helluva lot competition on the plugin side and dedicated unit side too. That doesn't mean they couldn't offer something new with the (sequencer will be there anyway) plocks and fresh digital take on effects.

"first of a new line of products..." hmm. Here's hoping the aforementioned Elektron expertise with sequencing, plocks, digital rawness and effects would be brought to Eurorack side with maybe a bunch of modules.

I just hope for a hardware Five12 Numerology type sequencer with effects, plocks with space-station blinkylights and retro seventies-type of funky hardware box with gazillion knobs and a big screen to see the envelopes, lfos, oscilloscopes, effects...the SEXKVANTZAH. on-the-fly adjustable bezier-curve type effect sequencer for the live performance-minded masses. Since the Elektron sequencer keeps getting better and better.. This is what i want to see. Bring it on Elektron!

A dedicated sequencer would have to be pretty special to complete with the sequentix Cirklon.

Is it actually confirmed they are releasing anything or is this not all rumours?

If they are my bet would be on a poly keyboard.

Just rumours but perhaps there is something to it? The just announced sale makes me wonder...

WEll Novation just released the mininova and korg is suppose to release something September 4th, so I think it is likely elektron might release something too? who knows.

All that said I think I might take advantage of that 20% off and get me a monomachine come october.... hmmm.

Also what exactly is the success rate of a Chinese-bot gibberish-spam-post that contains a sprinkling of links to Gucci bags and Viagra? It's got to be less than 0.0001% - I don't get it!! :S

I don't need any other machine, I'm very happy with the OT.

But I do hope they release a rock steady OS soon and maybe a manual in Uspekistanish, it will be just as handy as the french version....

Well... French being my first language, I appreciate that they translated the manual. Useless for the native english people who already had the manual in their language of course, but their machines are used by a lot of people worldwide, and some of them don't understand english well. Also, I'm pretty sure that the person who translated the manual isn't the same person who is working on the next OS, and thus is not delaying the next OS update.

Don't worry Ringo, all the Pakistanies I know speak very good english. May be learning a bit of French will help you chosing a better name for the forum, Ringo means "ringard" in French slang (check that word in your on line translator).

After 15 years of messing with synths I have bought my first sampling machine - the Octatrack. This thing is incredible, so enjoyable that I am not touching my synths & romplers anymore, and the just landed French manual makes it even more user friendly.

I have the 3 Elektrons in my home studio and I promised myself that I won't buy anymore music gears, but who knows what Elektron is cooking for us...

Two or three voiced analog with one or two oscillators per voice with a midi/cv sequencer and two analog filters.

Make the control path computer controlled. Make the audio path patchable with some mini cables. Like an analog MS-20 with a computerized SQ-10.

There seems to have been some research into modular synths in Gothenburg recently. At least a lot of modules have been bought, according to reliable sources.

THIS THIS THIS!!

Analogue semi modular with Elektron sequencer strapped to it, patch points with maybe a pin matrix!!!

Maybe I should just bite the bullet and start a modular:S

FYI if the OT had Midi Scenes this would be a real possibility.
If there are ever mk3's then with this feature I'd upgrade no doubt.

On topic though I am genuinely excited to see what Elektron come up with next, but will wait to see what its Midi scenes: yeah!!

But i think it has to do with the midi-bandwidth..... radical fadermovements generate much midi-traffic

I'd probably upgrade to MD mkIII if it came with a cross-fader ala OT. MM... meh, never really cared for it (onto my 4th one these days)

Noisebuddy wrote:

Midi Scenes can be done; the logic is there in the machine. And it is easy enough to restrict the number of variables / and or the interpolation (detail/amount) of the CC data being sent.

So "too-much midi traffic" is a misnomer, if you can restrict the amount of midi data being sent... seeing as it already sends Notes/CC's for the Arps/LFO's no?

Thats what vexes me the most about midi scenes (as it has been my number 1 request since day 1; well apart from midi tracks...); it's doable, can be done, waited a year of "maybes" and then told no. And their FAQ still fails to neglect that; "All parameters of all tracks can be assigned to the crossfader."; well, certain parameters of audio/internal tracks only.

Ah well, I have a workaround to deal with this, just a pain to do and should have been down in the beginning rather then having to figure it out myself.

Also interested to know what you have worked around Rusty. Midi out cable back to midi in?

Re scenes, I also agree the logic is there.

We can already p-lock 30 parameters per midi track x 8 tracks.

Midi scenes wouldn't add more parameters, just override the ones already there.

Maybe there is some issue regarding how the x-fader data is read by the internal processor but I don't understand the reasoning by Elektron regarding midi overload to external equipment as that would be more related to the capabilities of the gear in question.

Anyway it's surely on many wish lists for future Elektron gear if it's not eventually implemented with the OT.
