
How do you display your Elektron stuff (Studio pics)

Inspired by NeilBaldwin's 3 tier rack system.

Post your pics of how your kit sits in your studio, the more inventive the better.

Here is my minimoog style frame matching the rest of the studio.

MonoMachine is obscured by the new work chair slightly - but that is my over all work space.

Absolutely! I thought i was the only one who actually owned that synth. It's an absolute beast. I really wish it had an ext input though. Would love to use those filters on other stuff than the internal synth engine.

Well I had to post after seeing yours :)

Since there are some fellow Z1 owners on here I'll offer you and Aberen something. If you Message me you address I'll send you a CF card with the ZSC01 expansion patches on it.(I have like 20 CF cards gathering dust. Then all you need to do is buy a PCM to CF adapter from ebay or wherever (I got mine for $8 shipped) then you'll have all the Korg patches plus several hundred more slots for storage. That is if you dont already have the expansion card.

I'll play...but clearly you al have more toys ;)

My DJ set up. Old school technics but the new school Serato

http://i45.photobucket.com/albums/f57/djadonis206/photo1_zpsddfeedb9.jpg

My music set up. I try to keep it simple. The OT controls the Virus and syncs up the MD. I record "takes" into Logic Pro which sends rock solid midi clock to the OT.

inspired by ikeahackers. my wife called this my 'bob the builder' project. I spent quite a bit of time converting my desk to a standing office. not entirely convinced with my monitor placements but they work ok for now.

primary intent = reduce neck strain, hence why everything is up pretty high for minimal neck strain when looking at screens...

obviously a perfect space in the elektron rack for an analogue four soon...planning to fill the last bit of space with a Behringer Xenyx 502 mixer so the audio flow will be something like:

turntable -> mixer -> xenyx502

machinedrum -> xenyx502
monomachine -> xenyx502
condenser mic -> xenyx502
xenyx502 -> octatrack
analoguefour -> octatrack octatrack -> analoguefour octatrack -> AK-1 audio interface
AK-1 -> Tannoys
AK-1 -> Edirols

midi sync in a simple thru chain including into AK-1 and thereby into Reason/Maschine bugger - just realised I have never posted photos to the internet and they are all too big...

Tarekith, awesome space, though my brain would melt in a room so sterile!
My mind is chaos and my work environs invariably end up reflecting that.
Still though, gorgeous looking, and I bet it sounds wonderful.

Atebit: SO SWEET. that elektron shelf is doing unmentionable things to me. :U Though, wouldn't you rather put the A4 beside the OT, get the black and the silver boxes paired up? Though on teh other hand, putting the A4 beside the MnM keeps the synthesis and the perc/sampling together... auuugh my inner designer is torn! x3

I can't wait until i get my setup in a few months and have something fancih to show off. :U

... and Nobl1v1on, regarding unsightly cluttered cables and power supplies, I subscribe to the 'out of sight out of mind' theory. :silly: I dont know any other way around this except minimalism and equipment reduction. Maybe others can offer better suggestions. I do pull everything apart and vacuum/ update power supplies once a year or so. The dust is what offends me the most.

wrong- minimalistic environment (nice room, opals, linx hilo, elektron boxes)?

Pretty much what I planned to do so I can take them downstairs and chill out with them but I would need a tiny mixer of some sort I guess (MD+A4).
I take it that you have the A4 running into the OT?

The original post was meant for just elektron stuff and how you have them displayed/mounted etc but it's nice to see some studio's so the thread is better for it.
This is mine just before I sold the Mopho/ESX/2nd monitor and bought the A4 which now is displayed right behind the chair.

I guess the reason why the AnalogFour got the full pain job is because of its minimal need to know what the buttons are for.

The paint Im using is Fabric paint. Drys as soft plastic vs regualr paint chipping and screwing up you gear. You have to have a lot of patience when doing it, and dont reccommend it without having the patience and a plan

That is nutso Frogstar, but in an awesome way.

I'd set so damn afraid to set any kind of paint to a machine worth over a grand though, even a gentle impermanent kind of paint x3

The effect is quite stunning though. Ever get those sonsabitches under some blacklights?

They are under blacklight in the pics. I have DMX controlled UV panels through VSTs.. So I can assign LFOs to the Blacklights and Use the Cirklong to do a Push function so any notes that are triggered enable the brightness or strobe speed

It's the Truss-frame, Watson makes them, and he currently also has a limited run in black for all you A4/Octa-men :)

<https://sites.google.com/site/companyofquail/home>

Thing on the side is the SPL Phonitor, headphone-amp, makes it way easier to create perfect mixes on headphones. Actually it makes it way easier(for me at least) to do mixdowns on cans than on monitors as you can gradually change crossfeed, center level and speaker angle. So shift in and out of can precision into real stereo-mixes.

Is the MPC the "hearth" of your setup? How do you use it?

Re:How do you display your Elektron stuff (Studio pics)

Posted by modularmind - 2013/01/15 06:45

Yes, I use the MPC as the "heart" of my setup. I use the Nord G2 as my master keyboard and run it through the MPC. Midi out A of the MPC goes to the Monomachine, midi out B goes to the MD. The Monomachine midi out is connected to all my other synths (Nord, Shruthi and QY-70). This means I can use both the MPC sequencer AND the Monomachine step sequencer to run my synths (even at the same time if I want). I like to program some parts with the step sequencer and record other parts live in the MPC sequencer. Best of both worlds. The MPC also acts as master clock. Only downside to this is that the tempo on the Mono and the MD constantly fluctuates ever so slightly. This fluctuation causes glitches in the tempo synced delays on both the Mono and the MD. It can be a bit annoying some times. It's not because the clock from the MPC isn't stable enough. I've tried using the MD as master for the Mono and vice versa with exactly the same results. The MD and Mono seems to have a unreliable way of calculating the tempo from the external clock - it's too sensitive for it's own good. :dry:

One (big) advantage of having a table like this is that you can hide the hundreds of cables inside the table. I don't like too much of a mess in my studio.

Norwegian craftsmanship (home made) :) Several pictures of the building process here:

The Moog rack phaser, the MAM vocoder and the Roland SH-7 are sold. I'm planning to sell the SFX-6 too, but would like to record some of the material I've programmed for it first.

I love the SFX-6, but I can't stand not knowing my gear inside out. Currently I don't feel like I have the time/capacity to know all my gear intimately, so I need to focus. On Wednesday I powered up my gear for the first time in 2013...

OSCar, the Doepfer vocoder and the MD will stay, but I'm focusing on Serge and Octatrack. I'm in the process of expanding the Serge a little, but that's it for new gear in 2012/2013.

What's this obsession with synth studio pictures and cats? I mean I love cats, dogs, as much as anyone, but there's no way I'd let a cat on my synths, getting feline hair and particles where they don't belong!!!

In fact, you know how people stress "never left my non-smoking studio" on synth sale ads? I'd like to see that whole thing extended to pets ("no cat has ever been within 20 feet of my studio") :ohmy: :lol:

This is true. My cat goes everywhere in the flat... except in the studio. Analog, digital, VA - he couldn't care for any of them.

They'll work but I don't know if they're a long term solution. I had to cut the bottoms off so the legs are the right height. It's all very snug. You can't tell easily from the picture but the machines in front are angled too with the black plastic ikea laptop stands. I fit them all in there on my desk with barely enough room in front of the shelf behind them. The cords are all hidden except those you see in the middle but that could be fixed.

Temporary solution after my mixer arrived (yey!) and awaiting two sets of two-tier elektron stands due for arrival in one week. The A4 and MnM are resting on the kind of foam you find inside gun cases and such, I just took two big chunks each the size of one elektron, and removed some foam for the cables so they all run underneath neatly. A bit unsteady but will work for one week :) Having a mixer finally is really nice, having the Sherman and A4 on Aux sends is a big step up in flexibility, as is having subgroups and all that jazz...

Still need to make more space, so next week I am getting cut a 140x40 cm board of wood to make a second 'level' for the A7's, fireface and sherman. Hopefully this will allow me to shift the mixer and elektrons more to the left so I can place my laptop on the right side of the table during recording... my oh my 2013 is looking bright :)

Mackie 1642 if I'm not mistaking? Very nice mixer! I use the subgroups also to feed the inputs of the OT and to submix to my Motu 828. They call that double bussing. I just love all routing possibilities. Remix heaven :woohoo:

Yeah, suddenly I have so many options and it's almost a bit overwhelming at the moment :) But yeah, I also plan to use subgroups to send stuff to the OT for instant recordings and what have you.. wish there was a button to turn off the direct outs for certain scenarios, but apart from that it's pretty much exactly what my rig needed :)

Holy shit, some of the studios you guys have are just crazy! Insane. Really envious of all the Elektron stuff you have. I only have the MonoMachine so far, but will probably go for the MachineDrum once I have the money for it (after getting a new pair of monitors, the Equator D5's), and hopefully get a used A4 in due time too. Might have to start stacking gear soon though, it's getting tight on space around here. :D

Mostly i just plug in what i want to use. I did have it all wired up a few months back - the two drum machines - 9090 and miami - can hog 20 odd channel if all individual outs are used. Patch panels could well be the next thing although i had a bad experience with low quality units in the past.

as for usability - standing up (like for a live situation) it's great. in a studio setting, it's only really the top row that isn't perfect. having said that, i haven't found it too bad - when i need to do some detail work on the mnm, i stand for a bit anyway.

Went to a hardware store and got some "door stoppers" today, put them underneath the Monomachine and stuck some "tack-it" to one end, so that it wouldn't slip. Painted a piece of cardboard black and stuck it on the front to make it look a bit better. You can get any kind of angle you want, and the stand isn't as big as the IKEA BrÅda stand.

Very cheap and very easy. :)

Went to a hardware store and got some "door stoppers" today, put them underneath the Monomachine and stuck some "tack-it" to one end, so that it wouldn't slip. Painted a piece of cardboard black and stuck it on the front to make it look a bit better. You can get any kind of angle you want, and the stand isn't as big as the IKEA BrÅda stand.

Very cheap and very easy. :)

I can't really tell what you've done. Can you show us the bottom? And why cover the front? Thanks.

Elevated the unit with two doorstoppers, haven't fastened them yet, but I might fasten them to a flat magnet at some point, but doesn't seem like it's necessary. And you can obviously get more or less of an angle depending on how far you push the doorstoppers underneath the unit. :P Put the tack-it on the bottom side of the unit, like shown in the picture below, and covered it with black cardboard to make it look less stupid. :)

Daisuk, check these out for doing the same thing:

<http://www.bluelounge.com/products/coolfeet/>

I have dozens of these for various bits of gear in the studio. They just suction to the bottom of the Elektrons, so easy to remove.

Ah, yeah, that's nice. Bit of a slicker solution. More expensive though. ;)

This is a little part of the studio and also the part I use live with other 3 guys as Evasion Room Live. In the live the MD is a workhorse, I use it for everything except for drums, they're not my role ;)

Have you got a link for that mate?

<http://www.elektron-users.com/images/fbfiles/images/resize-f1f30bdfef861a2828f46b39bd87098e.jpg> Here's my setup. The ikea laptop stands (although not sexy) have made playing with the 2 boxes much more fun. It makes them easier to jam on, and easier to read the labels & such, which is handy, since the A4 is quite new:) The monitors are on ISO acoustic stands. This made a tremendous improvement to the sound quality and clarity of the monitors. I thought $99.00 was steep for stands, until I tried them.

My dream is to be able to have a standup studio, which I will setup when I move to a new house. So, it's still roughly a year away.

Cheers:)

Oh yes, how could I forget the 522. Great little drum synth :-)

Yes I sequence it using the Octatrack. Better than using the MFB's 8 buttons ;-)

In fact my Octatrack is now the centre of my setup. It controls or MIDI syncs everything.
