More fuel for speculation - Thomman Music store no longer has any Elektron products for sale. They used to offer MD and MnM - now the site search engine returns zip when you enter Eektron. I seem to remember they had the MKIIs up on this site before the actual release.

I haven't a clue about what's up with Thomman Music, but just to quickly silent wild speculation, the MM and MD mkII's aren't going anywhere.

You guys will enjoy the treats forthcoming, but I wouldn't expect a new machine just yet. just yet.

Oh yes, the dude is familiar! He's on those extremely slick "learn your MD UW" viedos.

I think they teamed up with wesen ... Elektron branded now plus a video by this guy showin what it can do to our elektrons.

Yeah!! I recognise this man! This is the man who has made 3 demos from MDuw and MnM. The links have been posted before, on the forum here... Huge demo! On the source site, there were those three demos per device, but we can't see those for three days now: only some wave tracks are available... (I've downloaded those right before!!)

Maybe a MnMuw?

Well I'll wait a little before buying a MDuw, so... We never know...

Not a MnM-UW. As it has been said many, many, many times around here, Elektron isn't going to release any new products that cannibalize the sales of the MM or MD/MDUW. So if you're holding onto your money in fear of those machines being replaced, you may as well spend it, because that is not going to happen.

A great-sounding sampler with analog filters would make me wet my bed. There's definitely a demand for something like that, I wonder no one has done it. Modern analog synths are a dime in a dozen, samplers with analog filters are as scarce as a virgin in the Playboy mansion.

there are older ones. sequential circuits did one and the EMU Emulators (I, II, III) had analog filters.

doesn't the spectralis have an analog filterbank in it?

i like analog filters as much as the next guy but i think the elektron filters sound pretty good and are pretty flexible and digital can be quite awesome sometimes.

Thats what I thought...

My uninformed bystander take is that...

- elektron are working on something new but are keeping things very close to there chest, if people outside of the company do know they will be sworn to secrecy so the news wont come out until they decide to let it out.
- major OS upgrades cost a lot of development cash so I dont expect anything else other than bugfixes (though obviously I would welcome a happy surprise.)
- elektron are in the process of creating a lot of advertising/web hype to build up to the major announcement: I expect videos, posters, stickers and anything else they can make up with the promise of further pleasant news to follow, the big teasers.
- Im not holding my breath on anything just yet; 4th quarter was talked about before but the recent job adds might suggest this is running into next year...

My money is on a sampler/effect unit, though i have nothing to back this up.

Re:elektron website newness?!?

Imo, Elektron has to be realizing that only a fraction of users are like us and that many many others buy the machines, fail to understand how to use them beyond the basics and end up selling. While the videos are over the top in terms of style and prooduction value, I see them as a very basic how-to intended to draw and hold new users. I'm very tempted to make a mockumentaty version... "Ja, ze Machinedrum sees me naked und calls its freinds."

As to the ever-present rumors, I'm through believing that there is a new Elektron anything coming any time soon. And I'm okay with that. Still holding my breath for the Monojoystick. :dry:

Yes, of course. Nothing to do with other vids we can see on youtube. For example, the Idm in a box or all the vids from Daswesen. But, it's very interesting to understand what we can do rapidly, with not so much deep programming time before. So it's interesting to see, as an elektron-gear-noob. For advanced users, I understand easily there's not much to see in there. As it is the case of all promotional gear vids ;)

You've got a point. It seems to jump out a little bit more though thanks to your catchy title;) Also, it's sometimes easy to ignore the top margin because that's where the advertising usually is on many sites.

Anyway, we can all watch the "click statistics" and see how many views it gets. I predict it gets a 1000 views in the next 6 months;) Too bad there is not a way to track who's clicking on it and when and from what country. Would be pretty interesting (especially to Elektron I suppose).

There were 3 vids, the first was mainly an introduction to the MD, second showed the basics of how to write a pattern and p-locks, and the third demo'd the UW functions. Was more of a sales pitch angle than tutorial IMO, so not a huge deal to current owners. They were well done though.

I'd love to see more elaborate tutorials in this style personally.

Hi,
since I upgraded to OS 1.53b, I can see the position of parameters linked to LFOs move.
So, when it moves, I can not see the value I have set anymore...
Did someone notice that ? And what do you think about this feature ?

yeah, I've got the same, the paramter position is moving rapidly.. I think it might be because I'm using ctrl-al machines, so the LFO might take its center vaue both from the source on the machine, and also from the value of the ctrl-al machine? not sure tho, just speculating...

Here, it works with all CTR machines but not with CTR-ALL ... are you sure about CTR-all ?

I guess you are trying to ask what is our opinion about the front page huh? Actually, the man on the header is a bit frightening and off beat. I thought you are selling musical instruments and I don't think that man can play any instrument. He is more like an action star rather than a musician. B)
