
Are we expecting a new Elektron product at Musikmesse?

Posted by hubiedubie - 2010/03/02 01:10

There has been a few mentions of a new Elektron product - I've heard it's either a sampler or an FX machine. Is there any truth to these rumours, and if so are we likely to see anything at the upcoming Musikmesse?

No, If you look back how they did it with the Machinedrum and Monomachine there was a sneak peak on the Elektron site before the Muzikmesse...

I hope I'm wrong...

Guys we need to join our forces. If we share every tip/rumour we've heard from Elektron-guys, maybe we can reconstruct the big picture with this little nippets of information. :laugh:

1. I remember Nils saying that Elektron said to him that they have no single keyboard in the house. So, mybe the coming product will not have keyboard. -> it's not a synth.

2. MnM OS had odd turbomidi-protocol added to it. We've only used turbomidi with sending samples to MD. So what is the use of Turbomidi in MnM. Mystery?

3. Elektron-guys said that coming product will form 'a perfect triangle with MD and MnM'. So they are continuing with machine-paradigm, coming product will be similar to MD/MnM?

Keep it going guys! :laugh:

i wonder if there will be a screen - if so, would the colour be the same or different to other elektron instruments..

if different colour, would the screen be emerald green?

re/ the new turbo midi implementation for the monomachine, that is cool .. and maybe there will be the option of Lfo interaction across midi lines between elektron machines.

Re:Are we expecting a new Elektron product at Musikmesse?

Posted by TrondC - 2010/03/02 17:04 actually, I really DO hope it comes with a green screen, would be perfect next to the red and blue ;)

oh, and hopefully it does something cool too ;)

other than that, theese rumours threads are getting ridiculous. yes, we all want something new, yes we all hope it's X or Y or Z, and no, we DONT have a clue what it is, when it's comming or if it's coming now or in a year ;)

...and again I hope it's the FX machine with some kind of never before seen vocoder, lots of different reverbs/delays etc, with a sequencer and the option to have each effect machine on seperate tracks. like the monomachine, only without the synthesis...oh, and loads of ins/outs..

okay, here's what it's gonna be: a small brushed aluminum box, a bit larger than the tm-1, with three male midi jacks that plug into the back of the monomachine. it will contain three female midi jacks on the back that mirror the onboard jacks, a usb port and a joystick on top. it will be held level with the monomachine with four little black rubber feet and have very sharp edges. also it will not come with a manual as there is no need for one but it will come with tiny elektron stickers that you can put on your fingernails. a perfect combo of the sfx-6, tm-1 and fingernail stickers. would you buy one? how much?

all they need to do is add MIDI ccs on every channel to an MPC with JJOS2 & you would have the sampler to rule them all. Plus keep the multiple MIDI jacks!

if elektron puts out a sampler i hope t breaks the mold of the typical sampler architecture. and i don't see why it wouldn't based on what they've done already w/the MD, MnM and sid station.

i'm sure whatever they do (if there is something new) it will hold to the user friendly design that permeates all their products. quick access to what you need w/some deceptively simple things that are really quite deep and controllable w/lot's of options packed into a handful or two of parameters.

between the MnM and MDUW they are pretty close to the basics of sampler instrument. maybe a modulation matrix and more RAM and whatever magic elektron sampling engine they'd come up with and some different filter types and fx etc..

i think they could figure out a way to pack in the features people need (instead of everything and the kitchen sink) and still keep it a "live" instrument.. that's the challenge and where most fall short.

Re:Are we expecting a new Elektron product at Musikmesse?

Posted by RobotHeroes - 2010/03/06 13:50

If they made a sampler that is something like the V-synth with elastic audio and all that good synth+sample+modular goodness, a rockin' work flow, usb for sample transfer/midi(ableton sync plox!) and a decent amount of sample memory plus memory card slot to swap sound sets/patches(or streaming) that would rule. Damn that sounds expensive.

yes a sampler! with key layering from a master key, time stretching/pitch shifting , at least 256 ram, monomachine seq, a good filter, elektron fx and capability, in standard elektron design, a sampler that can do some drum and melody stuff... would sell my md for afford these perfect machine please please please.....

There in lies the problem, they wont stomp on an older product and most likely will not make something that would make people choose between them.

Making something that is different enough from the other stuff to make it more so desirable along side what they already produce.

good marketing as well

thats a great point. It takes a hellish amount of brainstorming and design to come up with a suitable answer as we are discovering here.

MD MONO ?

I think some kind of advanced UW would be really nice and fit the bill. It wouldnt stomp on the drum machine of the MD. What are the limitations and boundaries they put on these things? Cost, Ease of use, Processing speed, Simplicity, Musicality. Also The MD and Mono are derived from lots of different parts of music tech history that have proven to be basic, fun and useable. So where in history are they looking now, if at all? That post about the synclavier recently was great. What a piece of kit. Or maybe they have completely new ideas and will come up with something completely new. All I know is what I would like to design and build.

Actually, I don't want to investigate whether elektron will come up with new stuff or not. I just found this video by coincidence. I'd be glad if I get machinedrum in my hands. Hopefully it will soon happen :)

need to copy and paste rather than select the hyperlink.

Octo Rack user wave .. maybe an 8 bit sampler?
oh, okay .. watching the video.. brilliant climax of the film ..
medals, nice! :)
and .. the Octatrack
what a name. love it.
trying to focus on work.

LOL

Whatever octatrack is, it seems to have the same typography as the rest of the elektron products.

Would it be possible to have discovered at least the name of the new dawn because of a badge maker guy video? :blink:

well, to further the hype...

i am subscribed to elektron's official vimeo page.

without seeing these recent posts, i was sent the video through the subscription.

so it is DEFINITELY a real elektronaut putting the buttons together.

for further reference it is:

OCTATRACK
